We all want to protect our children. We teach them and trust that they will make good decisions. But, what if you could offer your teen a hands-on experience to help them make better decisions on the road and protect themselves from other drivers?

Did You Know...

- In 2008, more than 5,000 teens died in car accidents.
- Drivers at age 16 have twice as many fatal crashes as those at age 19.
- 85% of crashes by 16- and 17-year-olds are due to driver error—not speed, drugs, or alcohol.

Simply, teens are not taught what to do in an emergency. Would your teen know what to do if they dropped two wheels off the side of the road? Do you know the truth about rollovers? More importantly, does your teen know how to avoid rollovers? At The New Driver Car Control Clinic, sponsored by the Teen Driver Safety Foundation, instructors will teach teens and their parents how to respond in emergency driving situations. Through both a classroom setting and a behind-the-wheel program, both parents and teens learn what to do when their car enters the 'emergency zone'.

The New Driver Car Control Clinic Works, But Don't Just Take Our Word For It...

After tracking the driving records of Clinic graduates' over four years, records confirm that Clinic graduates have 77% fewer crashes than their peers.

There are not enough words to express just how important this program is. Believe me, had I not taken this clinic, I truly feel it would have resulted in an accident on Sunday.
